Wommack's exposure has also grown with his ministry's online reach in the past several years, bootstrapped by the Truth & Liberty political organization he co-founded with fellow evangelists like Lance Wallnau and David Barton. The organization is heavily influenced by the Seven Mountains Mandate, a belief popular in Christian nationalist and New Apostolic Reformation circles which asserts that Christians must conquer the seven "mountains of society" or "spheres of influence," which adherents say are business, arts & entertainment, media, government, education, family, and religion. His political activity and comments he has made about his positions have repeatedly drawn a spotlight to Wommack in recent years. The day after a mass shooting at an LGBTQ club in Colorado Springs in 2022, Wommack lamented that the media "went overboard" with sympathy for the queer community. In February of this year, he said that a civil war would be "worth it" if it brought Donald Trump back into power. The following month, he boasted on a livestream that Charis has "more weapons than the local police department," saying that his followers are "armed to the hilt."
